

☆Awakening to Watching Sports!? (スポーツ観戦に目覚めた!?)

It all started with a football match at the Japan National Stadium on May 25, followed by basketball in September and rugby in December. Ever since my student days, when I used to pore over floor plans, I've had a habit of wanting to explore the inside of any building with an unusual design. While it wasn't a sporting event, I also went to a music concert at Ariake Arena in June. I found its circulation design particularly interesting, with the flow from entry to exit being almost entirely one-way.

As for the games themselves, every one of them was tense and thoroughly enjoyable. Rugby stood out in particular: the venue provided clear audio explanations and on-screen commentary showing which team had committed what kind of foul, so even someone like me—who isn't very familiar with rugby rules—could follow along and enjoy the match.

These days, it's no longer just about baseball—there's a wide variety of sports to enjoy. I can't help but feel that we're living in a great era for sports fans.

FC 東京×サンフレッチェ広島 0-3

TOYOTA ARENA TOKYO

A 東京×千葉 J 69:81

清水建設江東ブルーシャークス vs 日本製鉄釜石シーウェイブズ @夢の島競技場

先着 3000 名のベースボールシャツを着用しての観戦、当然気分は盛り上がりました。また応援に行きたいと思います。

有明アリーナ

某ロックバンドのコンサート会場